

Battery Saver mode is enabled by default in Windows 10. When your battery's power level drops to 20%, the Battery Saver kicks in to stretch the remaining power as far as possible. It dims your display. It also prevents Universal Windows Apps from running in the background and receiving push notifications. You can tinker with Battery Saver settings by typing "battery" in the search box and selecting "Battery saver" from the results.