

REVO: THE KING OF UNINSTALLERS

The biggest problem with the built-in uninstaller program in Microsoft Windows--besides loading slowly and holding back vital information--is that it means bits and pieces of the unwanted program may remain on your PC. It might be a couple of entries in the Registry, a few DLLs (dynamic library links), or a folder full of disk-filling junk.

On one hand, the leftovers may be benign and just take up space. With humongous hard drives, that's simply a nuisance. But on the other hand, some of the debris could interfere if you were to install a newer version of the same program sometime in the future. That's happened to many consumers with regard to the Zone Alarm firewall when the newer installation didn't complete correctly.

Revo: The King of Uninstallers

Revo is a little known--and marvelous--tool for removing programs from your PC. Several experts say it will exceed your expectations for a freebie and surpass anything Windows has to offer. Revo is compatible with all versions of Windows. You can access it at: http://www.revouninstaller.com/revo\_uninstaller\_free\_download.html

Revo gives you the details that the Windows uninstaller doesn't. It lists every program's version and location on the drive, tells when the application was installed, and provides links to vendor sites. Curious about a listed program? Right-click it and hit Google: Your browser opens with a Web search on the program. Or you can highlight a program's name and open its folder or Registry entry.

Most important is that Revo really scrubs your system clean when uninstalling a program. Revo first uses the application's uninstall routine and then scans your PC to find any odds and ends. Revo's wizard then gives you the option to remove them all from the Registry.
